ble to put the footings of the foregoing table in their proper places, we state them separately: The total number of heres of land in the State is 23,401,815; he total present valuation of the same is $74,666,248; the total of estimated new valuation is $155,928,429. The columns of averages do not foot. Of the estimated averages we remark, that distrusting our own judgment, we asked the Auditor of the State to look over and correct them, and we have the opinion of that officer that as they now stand, they are very liberal, certainly below in every instance the present actual market For lack of room we could not include in the table an exhibit of personal property, nor are we able to give pre-cise figures in regard to it, the value old State House shook with applause,— "The spirit of the speech is shown in the tion being altered each year, as the property appreciates or depreciates. In 1860, however, the personal property in the counties now composing this State amounted to $23,457,729. If we offset the enhancement in one part of the State by the deterioration in the other, incident to the war, we may conclude the total value is not materially altered. It is certainly not diminished. We therefore adopt the figures of 1860.

This makes the aggregate in the State, at the present valuation, $08,123,977, and the estimate of same under new valuation $129,386,158.

In the foregoing calculations, no lot or buildings in any city or town are included. The present valuation of this species of property is $9,175,079— considerably over one-third of which is in Ohio county. We believe it a fair estimate to say that the increase in value of town property has been proportionately as great as in lands. In Wheel, ing and Parkersburg, it has been much We suppose the $9,175,079 pught to be $20,000,000 at least, Wheeland Parkersburg alone will approximate that sum. Adopting the Taylor, elected in the Tuscaloosa district, was also a Bell-Everett man, and opposed secession as long as opposition was of any avail. If the Alabamians have not elected men who can get into Congress, they seem to have elected the best men they had, and it is satisfactory to know that there, as in satisfactory to know that there, as in most of the reconstructing States, the in Georgia for some twenty-five years, the signs of the times. Six or seven passed the secession act, and, though he Leesburg on horseback, and rode had constantly opposed it, he resigned through the city, gesticulating, cursing his seat and went home. He stood firm and threatening. They came from the against the rebellion, and in 1863 receiv northern part of Loudon county, and against the rebellion, and in 1863 received 18,000 votes as Union candidate for Governor of Georgia—a fact showing a sound basis of reconstruction in that status and state. Just before the Georgia convention adjourned an address to the president was adopted, and on motion of Mr. Hill a passage was inserted in it stating the fact that the convention had repudigned the rebel debt, which had been purposely omitted. While Mr. Hill's motion was pending he was abused by some of the secesh members, and was provoked to an eloquent and indignant speech. It broke the spell which had rested on the convention through delicacy towards the secesh members, and the bold words of Mr. Hill were heartly the bold words of Mr. Hill were heartly the federal soldiers, and before they defer all soldiers, and before they derived the bold words of Mr. Hill were heartly the federal soldiers, and before they derived the bold words of Mr. Hill were heartly the federal soldiers, and before they derived the sold State House shook with applause.—

The spirit of the speech is shown in the following massage:—

The spirit of the speech is shown in the following passage:—
"I never professed, because I never felt it, devotion to the ill-starred confederacy. I regarded it from the first with open disfavor, and never abated my disapproval of its insane origin.—

proximate that sum. Adopting these figures, we shall have a grand total of all the property in the State amounting, at the present valuation, to $107,299,056, and under the estimated new valuation, to $199,386,158.

The present valuation, as shown in the foregoing figures, if taxes were collected from all the counties, would yield at the existing rate of taxation, (40 cents on the $100,) the sum of $429, 198. From this deduct, one-fifth (a very liberal allowance) for delinquencies and cost of collection, leaving $343,357. Of this sum one-fourth goes to the support of free schools leaving $257,578 neutrovenue. The cost of carrying on the State government in all its branches, when in operation throughout all the counties will not exceed $125,000 annually. This would leave an annual surplus of $132,578.

Deduct $125,000 cost of carrying on the government, and we have still left an annual surplus of $353,527.

Since the organization of the State, but little over one-half the number of counties in the State have paid any revenue; yet the revenues has been sufficent not only to carry on the government but to pay large sums for extraordinary expenses incident to the war. The revenues to be paid by the same counties alone, under the present ar-
